

Reviews – I Hear a Song in My Head –

Dr. Gerry Shaper, retired epidemiologist in the London School of Medicine – July 17, 2012

Prepare yourself to make a compassionate, caring and humorous friend who will not only entertain you with a warmth that endears and an acerbity that bites but will also lead you through the complexities of Asian migrant life in an outpost of the British Empire, the difficulties of inter-racial relationships everywhere and the struggle towards independence and freedom for new African countries and peoples. This story is beautifully written in a clear and attractive style and by the end of it, I understood far more about a wide range of social and medical issues than I had before I started.

A completely absorbing, dynamic book, August 3, 2012

Galuppi (Oakland, CA USA) -

This completely absorbing, dynamic book is much more than a memoir. Dr. Tejani chose medicine when she was a young woman. She could never have imagined that her life would become a story to fascinate: her immense hard work and innovation as an obstetrician-gynecologist in Africa and the United States, her marriage to a fellow doctor of a different background, and her cinematic journey across several oceans. Written with wit and humor, this is a memorable book that her readers will not be able to put down until the last laugh and last cry.

I hear a song in my head - review, July 31, 2012

Krishna

As compiled this book records the career of the author from junior hospital doctor, training in obstetrics and gynecology and transit from Uganda with her pediatrician husband to the USA. She describes in sensitive detail the turbulence, both emotional and physical, suffered by peoples of Indian origin, ordered out of Uganda by the military Dictator, Idi Amin, a couple of years after the military coup that ousted President Milton Obote. It is an account that will be of interest to lay readers with any knowledge of political change in African countries. Equally it will be of interest to readers of diasporas.

Utterly fascinating and touching story, July 25, 2012

Manhar Patél

The author - Nergesh Tejani - has narrated an utterly fascinating and touching account of her life in India, Africa and U S A ; her facts so well written from the heart. A book well worth reading!

Terrific, June 1, 2012

Jafarious

Nergesh's writing is both interesting and beautiful. Her appreciation for culture and differences really make the book come alive both for those in the medical profession as well as the casual reader.